Testa piena d'orche

released in 2007
by Afe Records

Afe means
"A Friendly Edition"

The word "logoplasm" comes from Grant Morrison's comics "The Invisibles", where it described a drug that turned written words into visual hallucinations this record, though, wasn't composed in 2007. our basement (well, we are really talking about hard discs here, but anyway) is full of unreleased stuff. from time to time we put things out in 10/20 copies run. first edition of this one was actually a run of 8. we gave one to Andrea (Afe's boss) and he proposed us to release it. as you might have understood at this point, we accepted.

→ flags and chords, the impromptu erupting of whirlwinds & the simple scratchings of our days or such a big rock, hanging in so dark a vastness full of void and rocks. let's not forget the rocks.

we can be reached/contacted at www.logoplasm.org, and this record is dedicated to Kirs & Lupa. we love you.

What will you find in this record? it's a bit difficult to say, partly because it's a given that our interpretation of emotional aggregates ~~greatly differs~~, given two ~~different~~ points in time. it would be lovely to declare that we'll be leaving from a yurt, in a tundra, pass through contraptions of wavelengths and time just to land on the roof above our heads as we are writing this, first half of May, 2007 - only, two or three years before that, w/ radioactive temper, they formed Logoplasm in, what was that, 1999? 1999? 2000? every time that question gets asked it becomes increasingly difficult to reply. anyway, shortly after that, they put up a cd-r label, too; it was called "s'agitta recordings" and it was fun while it lasted.

meaning: "it trembles, nothing to do with Sagittarius"

→ the flight of birds, the tiptoeing of dogs, the unmistakable torsion-up of the anti-river salmon, the black flags & the black metal
